NOVEL AND UNIQUE INVENTIONS.—Among the inventions patented within the past few days, and notable either for their curious character or peculiarly useful purpose, we mention half a dozen. Commencing at the remote West, we find a California man with a new machine for dredging the channels of rivers to permit the passage of vessels having a draft deeper than that of the water. The propelling screws are conical and placed at the prow of the boat. Immediately below them, and in the same vertical plane as the cut-water, is a third screw, the rapid rotation of which cuts a submarine ditch in the bottom of the waterway to allow the passage of the keel. A projector from Down East, Connecticut, has a new window for churches and other edifices, which he proposes to substitute for stained glass. His alleged improvement consists in a colored linen fabric placed between two plates of ordinary plate glass. From the South a Missouri man procures a method of heating railway cars by hot air drawn through a sheet metal chamber with a stove in the centre, and distributed through the cars by pipes, the vitiated air in the car being expelled thereby through a cowl on the roof. In the North, most apropos to the time, a New Yorker provides a machine for making postal cards, in which the latter are cut from a sheet of paper fed unremittently to a pair of shears, and then passed to a gumming mechanism, which fits them with a flap unknown to the cards just issued with Government sanction.

STRANGE MALADY.—There is a family named Coleman, on Cabin Creek at the mouth of Ten Mile, who are afflicted in a most remarkable manner. Samuel Coleman, head of the family who is from the east, is now over eighty years of age. He has three sons, at home, and two of these have been in bed twenty and fifteen years, respectively. The affection or disease from which they suffer is not visible, but its effect is to completely prostrate their physical powers.

Richard, the oldest son is now forty-five years of age, and the last twenty of these he has spent on his back in bed. The second son, Noah, is the other subject of the terrible ailment. Both were splendidly built young men, and their remarkable physique of former years renders the mystery still more complete. A young man who is now about twenty-two, is living, and he, in conjunction with his aged mother, is striving to support his unfortunate family, his father being helpless with age. An affection of the spine is thought by physicians to be the cause of the prostration, but the cases, nevertheless, have not been satisfactorily accounted for. The second son is entirely helpless, and the only manner in which his couch can be smoothed, is to place another bed alongside and roll him from one to the other. The elder son is somewhat less helpless though. He is also in a terrible condition.—Charleston, W. Va., Courier.

VENTRILOQUISM is a beautiful science when it is practiced with discretion, but Brown's boy admires it with less enthusiasm than he once did. Brown's boy learned the art by watching Blitz, and the other day he was entertaining his little brother by holding an imaginary conversation with a mysterious person who was supposed to be in a Saratoga trunk. When Brown's boy would lift the lid, the voice would grow loud, when he closed the lid the tones would die away. At the close of the performance Brown's boy placed his lips close to the trunk for the purpose of producing a final effect, when the lid slipped and caught his nose. It was a spring lock, and it snapped and held the ventriloquist firmly. Then Brown's boy, in anguish, got his little brother to help him hold up the trunk, and he lifted it all he could with his nose, and the procession wound its way down stairs in search of Mrs. Brown and the key. After ascertaining with a slipper the toughness of the seams in the last patch on young Mr. Brown's pants, Mrs. Brown released him, and he went to bed, melancholy, and with a nose squeezed as thin as a table knife. He will probably not practice ventriloquism as a profession.

WINE PROSPECTS ABROAD.—The frost of April 26 last, which seriously damaged the fruit crops of many sections of the South, was still more destructive in France. The 20th and 27th of April will long be remembered there for the north of Italy. In the wine and fruit Reporter of May 28th there are several communications from Europe, all giving a lugubrious account of the condition of the vines. Not only is the present year's crop almost entirely destroyed in some places, but the vines already are destroyed, and the effects of this calamity will be felt for many years. Near Bordeaux the damages are light. All the vineyards situated upon low lands are injured more or less. In those which are fully exposed to the circulation of the wind the loss is hardly perceptible. All the vineyards of the islands are safe. The result of this destruction is that a very small amount of wine will be made from grapes, and to counterbalance the deficiency enormous quantities of spurious compounds will be thrown in market. Of this the U. S. may expect to import a large proportion. What a harvest of American gold eagles there is in store for the French wine manipulators. The gold could be kept at home if the prejudice existing against our native wines could be uprooted.—Atlantic Farm and Garden.

PHOTOGRAPHING A KISS.—In the neighborhood of Chiswellhurst, the other day, an enamored pair were walking pleasantly along, quite unconscious of their surroundings, and more particularly of the fact that an itinerant photographer had taken up his position, surrounded by an interesting crowd. As the swain and the maiden took their way, what more natural than that the former should imprint a chaste salute on the pouting lips of his fair companion? What more annoying than that the camera should have seized them in the act, and rendered it immortal? The hapless couple became aware of the fact from the loud outburst of laughter which ran through the assemblage as the plate was held up, and the girl at first, startled and threatened, but subsiding into a more reasonable mood, offered to purchase the negative. But the photographer was intractable. He was willing to sell any number of copies, but insisted upon retaining the original.
